Early Life and Career

Winslow Homer was born in Boston, Massachusetts, in 1836. He began his artistic training at the age of 19 when he apprenticed to a lithographer. After completing his apprenticeship, Homer worked as a commercial illustrator for several years. In 1861, he began studying painting at the National Academy of Design in New York City.

Homer's early work was influenced by the Hudson River School of painting. This school of painting emphasized the depiction of the American wilderness in a realistic and idealized manner. Homer's work from this period often featured scenes of the Adirondack Mountains and the coast of Maine.

Middle Period

In the mid-1870s, Homer's work began to change. He began to focus more on the depiction of the sea and its surrounding landscape. His work from this period is characterized by its strong sense of realism and its use of bold, vibrant colors.

Homer's most famous paintings from this period include "Breezing Up (A Fair Wind)" (1873), "The Fog Warning" (1885), and "Northeaster" (1895). These paintings depict the sea in all its moods, from calm and serene to wild and stormy.

Late Period

In the late 1890s, Homer's work began to change again. He began to focus more on the depiction of the human figure. His work from this period is characterized by its simplicity and its use of muted colors.

Homer's most famous paintings from this period include "The Gulf Stream" (1899) and "Snap the Whip" (1903). These paintings depict the human figure in relation to the natural world.

Legacy

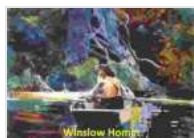

Winslow Homer is considered one of the most important American landscape painters of the 19th century. His work is characterized by its strong sense of realism, its use of bold, vibrant colors, and its depiction of the American wilderness. Homer's work has been exhibited in museums and galleries around the world, and it is represented in many private collections.
